Jews Expect West Germany To Restitute For Nazi Wrongs

The sincerity of the West German Government's offer to make suitable financial restitution for the wrongs committed against Jews during the Nazi regime is scheduled to get a speedy test. While voicing skepticism of realizing a satisfactory settlement, representatives of Jewish organizations are active in making preparations to negotiate with the Bonn Government, as proposed by Chancellor Konrad Adenauer, in a statement endorsed by the Bundestag.

Benjamin Ferencz, director general of the Jewish Restitution Successor Organization, said Jewish leaders already had met in Paris and planned another meeting October 28 in New York in response to Dr. Adenauer's offer.

Chancellor Adenauer said September 27 that his Government, jointly with representatives of Jewry and Israel, was ready to bring about a solution of the reparation claims. While Israel thus far has scrupulously avoided recognition of the Bonn Government, Mr. Ferencz said Tel Aviv would be represented at the New York meeting.

Israel never has disclosed her ultimate reparations demand on Germany, but last March, in notes delivered to the four occupying powers in Germany, the Israeli Government demanded $1,500,000,000 from West German export proceeds to pay for the absorption and rehabilitation of Jewish refugees, says the New York Times.

The Jewish Restitution Successor Organization, which has its headquarters in Stutgart in the United States zone, deals with the financial restitutions of heirless property, that is, payments growing out of claims on the German Government and private individ[illegible] whose families [illegible]

The entire program of restitution to the Jews is complicated by the fact that not only was the country split into four zonal bases after the war, but that within individual zones the laws vary. In some areas restitutions began almost immediately under Allied sponsorship and many payments already have been made.

Interviews with West German officials and Jewish leaders have made it clear that they are not always talking about the same thing when they refer to restitutions.

Dr. Friedrich Kuschnitz of the Bonn Finance Ministry estimated that the total German restitutions to all Nazi victims would amount to a minimum of 8,000,000,000 Deutsche marks (approximately $705,000,000). In giving that figure, he hesitated to say that the Jews would prove to be in the majority of the victims of the Hitler regime.

Jewish leaders said they were prepared to demand restitutions totalling 3,000,000,000 marks for Jewish victims alone.

Figures on the amount of the restitutions of various types already paid are difficult to obtain, apparently even for Allied and West German officials. They are based on two types of laws, one a United States-British law affecting the restitution of property the Nazis either seized from the Jews or forced them to sell, and the other dealing with general claims against Germany for physical suffering and injuries under Nazi persecution.

Some idea of the payments already made may be gained from the following figures:

In the United States zone, under the Property Restitution Law, 839,225,389 Deutsche marks worth of property has been restored to Nazi victims, while 89,311,178 [illegible] worth of property

Reports DP Now Down To 25,000

The Institute of Jewish Affairs of the World Jewish Congress reported that the problem of Jewish displaced persons, a serious issue a few years ago, was nearing solution. The institute indicated that the number of displaced persons in camps in West Germany, Australia and Italy h[illegible]dwindled from 250,000 to 25,000.

The report was prepared by Kurt R. Grossman, co-author of "The Jewish Refugee." He traced the refugee situation from the freeing of inmates of concentration camps in the last days of World War II. The last camp in the British zone of Germany had been closed and the number of camps in the American zone had dropped to four, Mr. Grossman noted.

The report said that thousands of displaced persons were awaiting the opportunity to emigrate. These include 3,500 "hard core" cases who require institutional care wherever they go. Such cases, the study added, will be transferred to Israel when Malben—an agency supported by the American Joint Distribution Committee for the care of ill displaced persons — is able to expand facilities.

More Jewish displaced persons emigrated to Israel than to any other country, according to the report. Between December, 1945, and September, 1946, 15,000 immigrants arrived in Palestine, "of whom 9,296 were so-called 'illegals' traveling in the vessels of the secret rescue fleet of the Jewish underground force, Haganah." At the time of the establishment of Israel as a nation in May, 1948, 16,000 "such illegal immigrants had been interned in Cyprus by the Mandatory Government."

According to official data of the International Refugee Organization, 129,766 displaced persons went to the Holy Land between [illegible] and 1950, the report said. It [illegible] that by last July, 77,[illegible] entered the U. S. and relatively large numbers also had emigrated to Western Europe.

The report estimated that, as a result of continuing emigration, the Jewish population of Germany —including both German Jews and displaced persons—would total no more than 30,000 by the end of this year. Germany had a Jewish population of 600,000 in 1933.

Mr. Grossman and Maj. Abraham S. Hyman, the last adviser on Jewish affairs to the American armed forces in Germany, paid tribute to the western occupation armies in Germany and Austria for their handling of the displaced persons problem.

Both also lauded the work of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration and the I.R.O., as well as the United Jewish Appeal, the Joint Distribution Committee, the Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society, the World Jewish Congress and the Organization for Rehabilitation Through Training.

Israel To Get New Freighter

Israel's waterfront, its only border now open to the rest of the world, is being rapidly improved to handle its increased shipping activity and expanding young merchant marine, Raphael Recanati, general manager in New York of the Israel-American Line, said there.

Mr. Recanati, also manager of the American-Israeli Shipping Company which represents Israeli-flag service, returned from a two-month tour of the company's facilities abroad. He attended the second annual stock-holders meeting in Israel which announced a six per cent dividend for the year 1950-51.

The line, Mr. Recanati said, plans to add another freighter to its five-ship Israeli-flag fleet which plies between the U.S. East Coast and Tel Aviv and Haifa. Nothing has yet come of the often-mentioned project of operating a passenger vessel on the same run, he said.

Acquisition of the freighter will bring to eight the number of Israeli ships now in trans-Atlantic service, and this will be increased further by another freighter for M. Dizengoff & Co. (Shipping), Ltd., a competing Israeli line which owns and operates two of the vessels. Mr. Recanati spoke enthusiastically of development of the port of Haifa.

"The Kishon River is being completely equipped to add 600,000 tons to the capacity of the port," he said. "The Government is

A.J.C. SERVES SHARP NOTICE ON ZIONISTS ABOUT STATUS IN ISRAEL AND TEACHING EXILE CONCEPT

The American Jewish Committee, one of the most influential organizations of its kind in the United States, served notice that it would oppose with every means at its command the recent agreement by Israeli leaders to give special status in Jewish matters to various branches of the World Zionist Movement.

In a resolution adopted unanimously by one hundred communal leaders at the closing session of the A. J. C.'s executive committee meeting in Chicago, Ill., the delegates challenged organized American Zionists who have argued, with considerable success, that they should be the spokesman for American and world Jewry in relation to Israel.

In a direct slap at the Jewish Agency for Palestine, the administrative arm of the Zionist movement, the committee described as an "impropriety" by Israel the "granting of any kind of diplomatic recognition to any non-governmental body," and opposed granting political status within Israel to any non-Israel organization. The Israel government has agreed that the Jewish Agency should have direction of various aspects of the immigration program. Funds for the support of the Agency are provided by American sources.

Another impropriety, according to the resolution, was the decision of the Israeli government "purporting to grant to any organization any special status with respect to activities of Jews and Jewish communities in America or anywhere else outside of Israel." The Zionist movement in the United States has sought recognition as spokesman for American Jewry in dealing with Israel, says the New York Herald Tribune.

It was said in Chicago that at the recent World Zionist Congress in Jerusalem the Israeli government agreed to consult with the Zionist movement before allowing any non-Zionist group to advance a program of aid to Israel.

The resolution also expressed opposition to efforts by either Americans or Israelis to interfere in the internal affairs of each other's country; denounced as false and unrealistic the concept that Israel is the only place where Jews can live in dignity and security, and expressed criticism of efforts by non-American groups to carry on educational activities in the United States. The Committee contends that an effort is being made to teach American Jewish youth that Israel is their home and that Hebrew should be their language.

"The officers of the American Jewish Committee are directed to seek implementation of the views herein expressed and to base upon these views their future action with respect to Israel," the report stated, according to the New York Herald Tribune.

The committee submitting the report was headed by former New York Supreme Court Justice Joseph M. Proskauer, now honorary president of the A. J. C. Other members were Ely Aaron, of Chicago; Herbert Ehrmann, of Boston; Fred Lazarus, of Cincinnati, and Isadore Levin, of Detroit.

Earlier the committee discussed the report made recently by Dr. Robert M. MacIver, professor emeritus of sociology at Columbia University, recommending a basic reorganization and redistribution of functions of the various Jewish organizations in the United States.

The executive committee recommended expansion and strengthening of community relations work in the United States as a vital step in relieving the domestic tensions which reflect unfavorably on the United States in its dealings with other nations.

Irving M. Engel, of New York, chairman of the executive committee, said that "in this day of international uncertainty, it is important that the American people strengthen their defenses in every possible field, and the field of community relations is one of the most important.

"The American Jewish Committee is convinced that well planned and thoughtfully executed community relations activities are indispensable to the security of America.

"Community relations is concerned with the breeding ground of prejudice — with inadequate teachings about racial and religious factors to the children of America's public schools. Community relations is concerned with underlying tensions, fears and anxieties which can be exploited by aspirant demagogues and political self-seekers to the detriment of one or another of the minority groups in America and to the detriment of America itself."

The Committee lauded the stand of American delegates at the World Zionist Congress for rejecting "the notion, from whatever source it emanates, that American Jews are in any sense 'exiles.'"

Jacob Blaustein, president of the American Jewish Committee, asserted that American Jews "reject the concept that they are in exile."

"Confidence in the security of American Jewry's future here," he asserted, "and in the possibility of continuing to build a rich and meaningful Jewish life that embodies the best in the American and Jewish traditions has never been greater.

Mr. Blaustein said that "we fully realize that Jews living under communist tyranny now, or who had lived under the Nazi and Fascist tyranny of the past find it difficult to understand that Jews can live in security and dignity in America and other democracies of the world."

Irving M. Engel of New York, chairman of the executive committee and presiding officer of the session, said that Jews in America, like other groups in the country, differed among themselves, says the New York Herald Tribune.

"While bound together by a great historical religion and to a considerable extent by common experience and cultural heritage," Mr. Engel said, "Jews in our country nevertheless reflect the American pattern of diversity. They differ among themselves with respect to such factors as degree of integration into American life, sectarian affiliation, political beliefs, and economic philosophy."

The American Jewish Committee, which is forty-five years old, is the oldest Jewish agency in the United States devoted to safeguarding the civil liberties of Jews and combatting bigotry. The Committee also is considered one of the powerful groups in the field of Jewish community relations in the U.S.

Was Active In Theatre And Labor

Reuben Guskin, sixty-four, active for more than thirty years in the Jewish theatre and the labor movement, died in New York at his home at 299 W. 11th St. of a heart attack. Mr. Guskin had been president of the United Hebrew Trades, a former president of the Workmen's Circle and a member of the administrative board of the Jewish Daily Forward.

He came to the United States from Dobrojsk, Russia, forty-seven years ago when he was seventeen years of age, having participated in his early youth in a revolutionary movement in Russia against the Czarist regime.

After a few years in the Jewish theatre he was elected in 1918 as Miss Wilner, the honoree, wore a black crepe dress, trimmed with velvet, with rhinestone-embroidery on the belt, and a slim skirt. Fifteen guests were at the tea table, which was arranged with gladioli.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Rosen, Melrose Avenue, celebrated the bar-mitzvah of their son, Morton Leon, who was called to the Reading of the Law at Shaare Zion Synagogue. He is the grandson of the late Mr. and Mrs. Rubin Victor; and of the late Mr. and Mrs. Moses Rosen, all of Montreal. At the ceremony, Rabbi Maurice S. Cohen, of the Synagogue, said of Morton and his voice: "Today I should really not call you Morton, but David, the sweet singer of Israel". Kiddush was observed after the ceremony. Mrs. Rosen wore a plum-colored dressmaker suit, with matching trimming; a matching velvet hat, with blue-beaded embroidery; and navy-blue suede shoes, purse, and gloves. The following evening, there was a cocktail and dinner, at which two hundred and fifty guests were received, at the Mount Royal Hotel, in the Cartier and Hunt Club Rooms; and the Sheraton Hall. Mrs. Rosen wore an ice-blue brocaded satin strapless gown, with a full skirt, and matching, beaded, cape-effect jacket. The brocaded design was of lilies-of-the-valley, inset with beaded embroidery; and the peplum, long bodice, and jacket collar were bordered with embroidery of white pearl-beading and rhinestones. Mrs. Rosen had diamond drop-earrings, and a rhinestone-embroidered evening bag. The receiving line in the Cartier Room was before a green trellis, inset with red and white gladioli, with a background of flowering dogwood branches. Hors d'oeuvres were served in the Hunt Club Room, with cocktails. There, red and white gladioli were used as a sunken garden decoration; and a rope of leaves formed a scalloped design on the table. In the Sheraton Hall, dinner was served by candlelight; and dance music was played throughout dinner, and in the evening. Gladioli branches bordered the half-moon-shaped head table. It was decorated with arrangements of red gladioli, with red and white carnations, and white and red candles in five-tiered silver candelabra. White gladioli and red carnations, with white candles in silver candelabra, were used on the other tables. In front of the head-table, there was a small table with the bar-mitzvah cake which was white, in the shape of a book, and decorated in blue, with red roses, and garlanded with a rope of leaves. Red and white candles in candelabra were set behind the cake. In the evening, there was a sweet-table, and coffee was served. The sweet-table was shaped in Morton's first initial, the letter M. There were lighted red and white candles in candelabra on it; and two rotating cake stands heaped with marzipan fruits and autumn leaves. At the dinner, seated at the head table with Mr. and Mrs. Rosen and Morton Leon, were his uncles and aunts; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Victor, Mr. and Mrs. Marcus Victor, Mr. and Mrs. Abe Rosen, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Rosen, and Mr. and Mrs. Hyman Rosen, who are also his godparents; and A. Daffner, cousins, of Troy, N.Y.; and Mrs. Gertrude Weintraub, an aunt, of Brookline, Mass.

has been turned over to the Jewish Restitution Successor Organization because there were no heirs. This represents the settlement of 67,702 claims out of 120,856 before the restitution courts, reports the New York Times.

Under the general claims laws, which vary according to German state legislation, total compensation payments of 116,687,396 Deutsche marks were paid to persons in the United States zone who suffered financial and physical injuries. In the British zone, where financial losses were excluded fro... consideration, the compensation payments have amounted to 296,000,000 Deutsche marks.

These were the restitution payments to which Dr. Adenauer referred when he said that "the first steps already have been taken" and that that "part of Jewish property it was possible to identify has been restituted." He added, however, that "much remains to do done" and that "further restitutions will follow."

COUSIN EZRA AND THE WEDDING PALACE

BY A. A. DAVIDSON AND ARNOLD ROTHSTEIN

The front door of the Lazarus house was never locked. Presumably a key existed somewhere. But whenever it was necessary for the whole family to be absent, one of the boys would latch the door from the inside and climb out of a window onto the porch. Naturally, there was no way of locking the window, but this ritual made a gesture of safeguarding the house and satisfied the Lazarus family. Besides, what could happen? Once, to be sure, Sarah—the youngest daughter but one—had found a strange man sleeping on the living room sofa. What did she do? She screamed? No. She called the police? No.

"He must be a relative," Sarah said. And he was. Second cousin (once removed) Ezra Lazarus. "Only (as Sarah complained) you never can remove him. He's always here, particularly at meal times."

"Ai, nebbish, such a skinny feller," Mrs. Lazarus sympathized. "I bet you he didn't have a square meal in years before he came here. No wonder he's hungry. When he eats once, it's for twice." The semantics of this last statement were perfectly lucid to the rest of the family, who truly did not begrudge cousin Ezra a single Kneidle. They grew used to his appetite, and to seeing his tall, reedy body curled up on the sofa; they became accustomed to his protruding brown eyes, petulant nose, wide mouth, and ill-fitting clothes—but they could not get used to his voice—and cousin Ezra fancied himself as a chazon.

The evening that they realized this started as any other evening. Mr. Lazarus was recounting to a neighbor the story of his escape from a Russian prisoners-of-war camp in 1918, omitting no detail, however slight. Mickey and Bill were doing their homework. Sarah was doing her nails. Rose was reading a magazine. Aaron was at the piano. In the kitchen Mrs. Lazarus was peeling apples.

Mr. Lazarus had gotten us far as Omsk, when the door opened, and Ezra came in, dropping packages.

"Look!" he said—quite unnecessarily. "Look, Louie. Look Esther, Aaron, Billy, Sarah. Rose, Mickey—Look!" He began to open the packages. A record album was the first to appear. There followed a black robe, a bundle of grimy sheet music inlaid with Scotch tape, a pitchpipe, a tuning fork, a bib, a biretta, and a copy of a Yiddish newspaper. There was also a faint but definite odor of Shnapps which could not be traced to any particular item. Ezra opened the newspaper and gestured toward a full-column advertisement. His remark lacked something of the element of novelty.

"Look!" he said. Everybody crowded around him. The advertisement contained three pictures evidently photographed through a dirty window on a dark day. In fat black letters—the kind that in former times had been used to announce pogroms — the advertisement made known to the world that the famous Yefimovsky-Grubkin Double Choir would give a Sefirah concert at the Congregation Anshe Slutsk. Ezra pointed to the pictures.

"Yefimovsky," he said. "Grubkin. The Choir." Then he pointed to the equipment spread about him. "I am in the choir," he said. And finally he convinced everybody that he was. "After all," he pointed out, somewhat hurt that it took so much convincing, "it's not like I was a greener in this; I used to be in the choir at home." Seeing Mrs. Lazarus' lips and fingers moving, he hastily added, "That was about twenty years ago."

"Twenty!"

"Twenty", he said firmly. "I remember distinctly, we sang for you on your birthday, Esther, and you were at that time . . ." He paused reflectively. The challenge was not repeated, so he put on his robe and biretta, and with the aid of a mirror and the whole family, adjusted the bib (or "dickey") at a point beneath his chin. The robe—previously the property of a bass chorister known as "Yussel Elephant" — fitted Ezra like a Mother Hubbard, until the knees, where it stopped. The biretta was also large, but so were Ezra's ears . . .

In the days that followed, the Lazarus family and, indeed, the entire neighborhood, became acutely choir-conscious. Right after breakfast Ezra would practice scales. Next, he played records—Rosenblatt, Quartin, and others. Having steeped himself in the proper atmosphere, he then began to sing various choral pieces as laid out in the grimy, Scotch-tapey sheets of music. After twenty or thirty renditions of "Av Ha-Rachamim" or "Kedushah", Mrs. Lazarus would gently close the kitchen door. After the fiftieth, she thought it best to go shopping or visit a neighbor.

The afternoons were devoted to rehearsals, and several evenings a week saw Ezra performing here and there. The remaining evenings he performed at home. Mickey and Bill took their homework to the house of schoolmates. Rose and Sarah saw every movie in town, and some of them twice. Mr. Lazarus found a practically soundproof niche in the cellar, where he would read a newspaper; and Aaron took to walking the streets.

Mrs. Lazarus was trapped. To leave Ezra absolutely alone was to provoke hurt feelings; to remain was intolerable. She thought of feigning illness — then she grew cunning.

"How hoarse you are, Ezra," she said to him one night. Ezra stopped short in the middle of an "Eyn Komocha".

"Hoarse?" he quavered. There followed the throat spray, the egg beat up in a glass of wine, the stocking wrapped around the neck, and silence—blessed silence. But it couldn't last forever.

One afternoon Aaron was called to the telephone—Ezra was speaking at the other end. The Yefimovsky-Grubkin pianist was unable to play, and there was a wedding that night. Right away had Ezra thought of Aaron; he had told the two maestros that he had a cousin, a conservatory student, a jewel among pianists; the maestros had consented to offer the jewel ten, maybe fifteen dollars, for the night. Ezra would have given a month's wages for a kind word from Aaron about his chazanuth, but he never had gotten one. His voice was diffident. Aaron would ordinarily have refused, but at that moment he had a rather pressing need for the ten (maybe fifteen) dollars. He said yes. The result was an evening long remembered.

"Grubkin Palace" was a two story brick building lit up like an exposition. In two tremendous glassed-in frames flanking the entrance were enlarged photographs of the choir-masters, both of whom Aaron met in the lavish office. Yefimovsky was a beady-eyed little man with a nose like a platypus; Grubkin (whose wife had financed the purchase of the "palace") was large, soft, and sagging. A cigar of the same description hung from the left side of his mouth. They shook hands with Aaron. Yefimovsky showed him what he was supposed to play, and after he had played a few "fahlen", Grubkin interrupted.

" 'S all right, kid. Come back after the ceremony an' I'll have your check. Now le's go in".

The accompaniment to the ceremony included, besides Aaron at the piano, a man at the Hammond organ, the best part of an orchestra, and the "world-famed" Double Choir. The choir was in full regalia—gowns, bibs, and birettas. Yefimovsky, who was to direct the choir, for some obscure reason had chosen to wear an academic mortarboard cap, the tassel of which fell in front of his nose. Grubkin was attired in white. He wore a white satin "kittel", a white cap almost a foot high and a white silk tallis. He was also wearing white suede shoes. A sound man tinkered with a microphone, and an electrician fiddled with the lights. As Aaron sat down, a huge electric Mogen Dovid lit up on the wall behind the piano. It began to flash on and off, in different colors, the words, "Mazel Tov"—green, red, yellow, blue, went the sheet music on the piano — "Mazel Tov! Mazel Tov! Mazel Tov!"

"Testing!" barked Cantor Grubkin into the mike. "One, two, three, woof! I guess tha's okay. Le's start the music". The orchestra began "Romania", but suddenly switched to "My Yiddishe Mama" as an old lady wearing a sheitel walked slowly down the aisle.

"Somebody's bubba", whispered Yefimovsky in Aaron's ear; "I fugget on which side a' the family. That's the zeyda right behind her. He doesn't get no music — there isn't no zeyda music, I don't know why." The unheralded grandfather was a bleak figure in a long, shiny kaftan and a long shiny silk hat. His beard was gray and forked, and his eyes were terrible: one could not look at them for more than a second. In those eyes was reflected all the agony of Israel; they were the eyes of one whom only the strongest of wills—or faiths—restrained from madness. And the band played, and the waiters scurried about with trays of wienies, knishes, and tiny sandwiches.

Next came the ushers, in formal evening wear, carrying canes; the band played "Pomp and Circumstance". After them, the bridesmaids, and the band played "A Pretty Girl Is Like A Melody". The entrance of bride and groom resulted in Mendelssohn's "March", "Because", and "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life". Meanwhile the Mogen Dovid flashed on and off—red, green, yellow, blue—"Mazel Tov! Mazel Tov! Mazel Tov!" Cantor Grubkin burst into "Mah Tovu" followed by "Baruch Ha-Ba", in both which he was accompanied by a Negro on the electric guitar.

"Baruch Ha-Ba", he bleated. Plink, plink, plink! went the electric guitar. Cantor, choir and band then rendered — or rended — "Mi adir at ha-kol"; the cantor in the key of C, the choir in G, and the band in B flat. The wedding ceremony had borrowed slightly from the Talmud and heavily from the movies. After "Birchath Erusin", the cantor read the Kethuvah in Aramic; and the band played "La Cinquantaine"; he read it in English and they played "Waves of the Danube" — which the audience knew only as "Oh, How We Danced".

"Do you, Shirley, take this man, Milton, to be your lawful husband?" inquired Cantor Gurbkin. Shirley did. Milton also gave the right answer. An attendant came forward with a glass wrapped in a napkin, and placed it on the floor.

"Let this glass be a symbol of the frujility of happiness", the cantor warned. "One harsh word, and . . smash!" Milton smashed, and the guests broke out with cries of "Mazel Tov!" only to be checked by the cantor's "Quiet, please!" He then lifted his hand like a Kohen duchening, and pronounced the first two lines of the "Yevoreck'cho". The band played "Largo" from "Xerxes" by Handel . . .

"By the authority vestered in me by the State of Noo Yawk, I now pernounce you Man-and-Wife!" At the word "wife", the band burst into "Happy Days Are Here Again"; the ushers raised their canes in salute, the flower girls flung petals on the floor like mad, and the neon Mogen Dovid flashed insanely.

While all this was going on, what was Ezra doing? Aaron had notice a sort of resonant grunting in the background, and finally traced it to Ezra. "Kol sason, v'kol simcha, kol chosen, v'kol kahlo", sang the cantor and choir, and, "Bum! Bum! Bum!" chanted Ezra. Once, indeed, he sustained a solo for a very few seconds. The ceremony was followed by a lavish meal, during which the bride's father passed out cartons of cigarettes, ball-point pens, neckties, necktie clasps, costume jewelry, and cigars.

After the meal the cantor was "persuaded" to sing a few request numbers. He sang "Keyli, Keyli", "A Dudele", "Bei Mir Bist Du Schoen", "Figaro", "God Bless America", and "Hatikvah". He then took a curtain call, mopped his dripping face, and announced that there was "a young fella in the band who's got quite a talent"— for what, was not made clear — "and who would sing a number he knew everybody would enjoy," i.e. and to wit, "Galitzianer Rhumba". The "rhumba" required the talented young man to pull a funny hat over his ears, purse his lips, blow out his cheeks, screw up his eyes, and rock his head from side to side. At this point Aaron left the hall.

The cold night air refreshed him. Not for a hundred or even a thousand dollars would he consent to witness another such spectacle of decadent vulgarity, he promised himself. Presently the party drifted out, and he walked up to Cantor Grubkin.

"You have my check?" he asked.

"Right with", the entrepreneur said, producing a pen

"Wasn't everything lovely?" inquired a perfect stranger (female) of him.

"Absolutely. You got the check?" Aaron seized it and prepared to leave, catching, as he went out, a glimpse of Ezra. He was listening to a stocky man in an ill-fitting tuxedo, and reached out for his cousin.

"This is Mr. Trumpitt, from Timber City, Tennessee — the bride's uncle by marriage. My cousin, Mr. Aaron Lazarus".

"We can't show you nothin' like this in Timber City, Mr. Lazarus", apologized the uncle. "I never enjoyed anythin' so much as this kowahr. I wish I c'd take it back with me".

"I wish you could!" Aaron said fervently.

All this was some time ago. Cousin Ezra is now the cantor of the Timber City, Tennessee, Temple. The Yefimovsky - Grubkin Double Choir is still going strong, and there isn't a night that Grubkin Palace doesn't have its two weddings, to say nothing of "barmitzvahs". Aaron has almost recovered, but he still cannot look at the "Cantor's Page" of the Yiddish paper without shuddering. For that matter, who can?

This story is from Jewish Life.

The Israel America Line, Limited, has declared its second net dividend of 6% to its stockholders, according to an announcement made in New York last week by R. Recanati, general manager of the line and president of the American-Israeli Shipping Company, Incorporated. All its vessels operated in the direct run to Israel from Eastern Canadian and United States ports.

FLIES FROM N.Y. TO INDIA TO OFFICIATE

Rabbi Bernard Heller, of New York City, took a trans-oceanic plane to Bombay, India, to officiate at High Holy Day services at the Progressive Union of Bombay, only Liberal Jewish congregation in India. He will remain in Bombay for two months as leader of the small India synagogue and will help to institute a program of religious education for youth and adults. Dr. Heller, a noted author and philosopher, made the trip under the auspices of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations and the National Federation of Temple Sisterhoods, which, together with funds advanced by individual congregations, assumed the financial responsibility for the journey. Arrangements for Dr. Heller's temporary ministry in Bombay were made through the World Union for Progressive Judaism.

Although the Jewish community in Bombay is small, it has existed there for some 2,000 years when the Bene Israelites are thought to have arrived from Palestine. Other Jews who comprise the Jewish community are the Cochin Jews who emigrated from China, and the Iraqui Jews who came to India some 150 years ago. Although out of touch with the mainstream of Jewish life for hundreds of years, the Bombay Jews have nevertheless retained their traditional rites and beliefs.

Dr. Heller, who was ordained at the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion in 1920, is well known as a student of philosophy and Judaism. He has contributed articles to many learned publications and has delivered papers on philosophy and ethics before the Central Conference of American Rabbis, of which he is a member. He is author of "The Odyssey of a Faith", and "Epistle to an Apostate", a reply to a Jewish convert to Christianity, which is due to appear soon.

The fascination the kitchen holds for youngsters may lead small hands into disaster. To prevent them from pulling pots of scalding liquid over themselves, turn all saucepan handles towards the back of the stove where they will be out of reach.

GETS POLIO CASE TO U.S. FROM ISRAEL

Because a visitor to Israel from St. Paul, Minn., took an interest in a child suffering from an infantile paralysis condition, the youngster, five-year-old Asher Novak, is now undergoing treatment at the Sister Kenney Institute. He is the first such patient to enter the Institute. Asher arrived in New York by plane and officials of HIAS, The Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society, met him at the airport, sheltered him, and then enplaned him for Minneapolis.

The youngster was accompanied by his mother, Mrs. Tzvei Novak, who is a nurse at the Kibbutz Mercavia settlement in Israel. Plans for the trip to America began when Herbert Kristal of St. Paul heard about the stricken child during his visit to Israel last year. On his return to Minnesota, he discussed the case with physicians at the Sister Kenney Institute, and they in turn corresponded with the boy's doctors in Israel. The Minneapolis physicians felt the child could be helped and the trip to the United States was arranged.

MR. DRABKIN, THE DIFFICULT TYPE

BY CHAIM HAZAZ, WINNER OF THE BIALIK LITERARY PRIZE OF THE TEL AVIV MUNICIPALITY
Translated from the Hebrew by Shlomo Katz

There are two kinds of old people — docile ones and difficult ones. The docile ones are that way against their will. What else is there left for them to do except be gentle and docile like a lamb in the hands of a butcher, or a condemned man in the hands of the executioner?

The difficult ones are logically that way, because they are superfluous in the world, finished, lost, and there is no one to save them. Everyone is comfortable; they suffer. All the world faces life, while they face death, they alone, they of all people. Everyone is happy, busy, occupied, starting fights and ending conflicts, while they are to no purpose. Everyone pushes them aside, inherits them and takes their places in this good and beautiful world, while they stand empty-handed, full of sorrow, malice and anger.

Malice, as is well known, is more common among the aged than among young people, though the young are more prone to it and, incidentally, I should mention that there is no qualitative difference between the malice of the two. But most of the aged would derive pleasure from cruel malice, except that their teeth are drawn and their claws pulled. Were it not so, were they able to indulge their cravings, some of them would get off their death-beds and destroy the world, then fall back on their beds and expire.

Mr. Drabkin was an old man of this sort, old and embittered as could be. Among the Zionists, he had ruled like a king, for Mr. Drabkin had been a rich man, energetic, active in public affairs and had made sacrifices for the rebirth of the nation and the restoration of the tottering tent of David. He had composed many "statutes" and suggested numerous "projects", all based on sound "economics".

He had addressed letters to prominent persons, such as "Kind Sir and Greatly Respected Dr. Pinsker, Leo S." and to many others, admonishing them, "Hasten, brothers, hasten", and "Let us direct our footsteps". He attended meetings and delivered orations and was in charge of appeals on the eve of Yom Kippur, and similar martial projects for our people and our sacred cities. He would have carried on were it not for the revolution which turned everything upside down.

Ever since that great miracle when men turned the ladder upside down, so that the upper rungs became low ones and the low rungs were elevated, and people were happy with his wonderful conclusion and with the new improved world, ever since then Mr. Drabkin was like a threshold on which everyone puts his foot. All the evils of the world befell him, and whatever man or Providence could inflict was visited upon him. He was pursued and robbed and imprisoned, he lived in the bondage of the Cheka, and he was tossed from one country to another, hither and yon, until he finally came to Eretz Israel.

At last! Eretz Israel, his hope and dream and the object of his longing and his toils. Here he would be among his own, in his inheritance, among his own people and brothers. Here he would know everyone and everyone would know him; all would love him and he would love everyone—one big family. Here, if one might say so, he knew every house and stable, every path and stone, the entire country, from Dan to Beer Sheba.

Here was Rishon L'Zion, sponsored by Rothschild, the great philanthropist, and here was Ekron, the attractive and pretty village with a well of fresh water in its midst, and its houses, sixteen of them, all alike, all with windows on their four sides, and stables at back of them and store houses for the grain; and here was Rosh Pinah in Galilee, surrounded by springs of cold water flowing from the high mountains of Naphtali, with its thirty-three houses built of stone, and stables for horses and donkeys and cows, and its farmers—former business men and teachers—working away diligently.

And here was Petarch Tikvah, with its scholarly and God-fearing farmers who invested their money in land which they worked with the sweat of their brows And here was Gederah founded by the men of Bilu, uncompromising idealists who wrought so much for the settlement of the Land of Israel. They were enthusiasts and unmarried and had no duty toward families; they brought to Eretz Israel nothing save their ideal and the shirts on their backs. Or take Yesod Hama'aleh, founded by the praiseworthy sons of Mezritch who built their village with their own wealth and wanted neither gifts nor loans from other men.

Yes, Mr. Drabkin had the entire country catalogued in his mind, from one end to the other and no one else in the world knew it as well as he. Hadn't he toiled on its behalf for forty-five years? How much labour he had invested in it! How many speeches he had made to say nothing of arguments, debates and quarrels. There was no denying, and this was one thing that was certain, he deserved praise. All the world knew his achievements, young and old.

He thought that when he would finally be worthy of the privilege of coming to Eretz Israel the whole country would come out to meet him and do him honour, making a fuss over him: "You are the Mr. Drabkin!" They would seize the hem of his coat and exclaim: "This is Mr. Drabkin! the Mr. Drabkin who . . . the very same." And he would say: "Brothers! What am I? I am only a plain soldier, simply a soldier!" and tears would roll down into his beard. But they would not hear of it and exclaim: "No! You are Mr. Drabkin!. The Mr. Drabkin who . . ."

And they would lift him up and carry him on their shoulders, rejoicing and telling his praise. Those wouldn't be words but aromatic roses, bunches of grapes, a veritable outpouring from the Psalms. But the roses wilted before they bloomed, and the grapes shrivelled. No one came to meet him, nor seized the hem of his coat nor cried hosannahs before him. Nothing, as if he had never been the Mr. Drabkin to whom all the villages and the entire community was beholden—as if he had been only a casual wanderer in the market place.

Well, if they didn't come, they didn't — they didn't have to. Instead, he went to them—how does the saying go? "If the mountain doesn't come to . . ." But they would not receive him, and if someone received him he paid no attention to him, and if he paid attention to him he was anxious to be rid of him. It seemed that they didn't know of his good deeds and hadn't heard about them. In vain he tried to tell about himself and recall memories going back to Pinsker and Lilienblum and to Herzl and the first Zionist Congress. No one was interested. Go talk to stones, it would do as much good.

In time, after he had completed his round of visits and his granddaughter, a girl of twenty working for a daily wage, could not support him, he began looking for something to do to earn his livelihood. But what could an old man on the verge of the grave do? He tried this and he tried that, but it came to nothing.

"We are old", he was informed by one of those who run the community, himself a domineering, arrogant and stubborn old man. "We are old, Mr. Drabkin; our time is gone. The good have passed away and only the refuse has remained. What kind of work would you like?"

"Do I know? Any kind of work, just so I earn a trifle for my keep."

" 'Do I know' is not an answer. I don't know either."

"Of all things that have to be done, is it so hard for you to assign one task to me?"

"Which for instance? Name it and I will get a ladder and take it down from the shelf for you . . ."

"How much I toiled for Eretz Israel! How I worked! I did not sleep nights for its sake. And the money I gave for it . . . yet I did not benefit from it at all. And in the end I am fallen lower than the lowest among the low, the cast-out in the family."

"What has been is past. What you did for your own sake. Good deeds are their own compensation."

"Everybody is worthy; everybody is deserving—only I do not deserve . . ."

"You are deserving but your sixty-five years are a bit too much; can you do anything about them?"

"What should I do?"

His interviewer did not answer this last question, and merely shrugged his shoulders as if to say: "There is nothing you can do."

"I worked; all my life I toiled for . . ."

"I have heard it; I have heard it already. People have no need for yesterday's leftovers. Such is the way of the world. We are old, crippled, useless."

"Not all the aged are alike. There are old men who are rewarded while others . . ."

"There are, there are. There is everything. Well, Mr. Drabkin, I don't have much time. I will write for you a letter of introduction and you go to the national institutions, perhaps they will find something for you. But look, now, don't depend on me too much, for they don't pay attention to recommen-

Mr. Drabkin took the letter "of heartache and pain"—as he called it—and began making the rounds of the institutions. In many a corridor he waited, and on many a threshold he stood, repeating his long story of past merits from beginning to end, but his words made no impression. They told him that not now, but perhaps some day, nothing very important but perhaps something, and thus he was made to go from here to there and back again, from a big shot (may his kind diminish) to a notable not noted for wisdom, learning or deeds, except that he was an important figure in the Agency.

"Blessed is the man that walketh not . . ." Mr. Drabkin quoted King David on his predicament. Yet he continued to walk hither and yon on his futile errands for days and weeks, growing ever more despondent and gloomy, and he did not overlook official or chief or underling without knocking at their doors and suffering humiliation. Until finally he became impatient and fed-up and raised his voice in protest:

"How much longer shall I suffer like this? How long will you drag this out and torment me?"

And the underling who was an assistant to an assistant was angered and rose in his dignity and shouted:

"What are you shouting here for?"

When Drabkin heard this his wrath mounted and he shouted back:

"I am not shouting, I am being shouted at!"

Then the underling jumped up, slammed his papers on the desk and cried:

"Am I keeping your inheritance from you? What are you screaming for here?"

No sooner did Drabkin hear these words than he was a-tremble and his rage overflowed and he screamed: "Of course you have my patrimony! Were it not for what I did, you would not be sitting so comfortably here! Were it not for what I have sown you would have reaped the plague! If not for my sacrifices in the beginning, canine officials like you would not tread on the heads of poor people!"

Now the official was wroth and cried: "Don't you make scandals here! Don't you dare make scandals here! I am warning you, in Hebrew!"

When he heard this, Drabkin retorted in Russian: "Naplevat!" (I spit on it.)

The official jumped up and seized the bell. "I will have you thown out, this minute!"

Hearing this Drabkin put his hands on his heart and raising his eyes exclaimed: "Me! they want to throw out! Me! Drabkin . . . the very same Drabkin who . . . One of the best of the first Zionists you will throw out? I would like to see that! Here I am, throw me out!"

The official at once removed his hand from the bell and lowered his voice while Drabkin continued to storm and heap insults upon him, each more colourful than the preceding one, wrapping them like a wreath around his head until all the other officials and factotums, big and little, were aroused by the outcries and came running, talking and shouting in their turn, till there seemed to be no end to it. In a while they appeared to have exhausted themselves, but like the last clap of thunder in a storm that is receding on the horizon one of the sharper ones among the officials raised his voice and shouted: "Idiot!"

Drabkin jumped on him and made mince meat of him and honoured him with many compliments and specifically explained to him that his like used to carry Drabkin's things when he went to the bath-house, etc., etc. Meanwhile there came in an official from Mizrachi, a young man of clear complexion, a trimmed beard framing his genteel face and a skull cap on his head. He soothed Drabkin while chiding him gently. He softly disapproved of his behaviour and ambushed him with parables from the sacred writings and the sayings of the Sages, and in-between he broadly hinted to him that there was no chance of his obtaining employment since there was work only for young men.

Drabkin looked at him and nodded his head sardonically, then declared:

"On the coins of Father Abraham there was engraved an old man and an old woman on one side and a young man and a young woman on the other. I still don't know which was the observe and which the reverse. It is quite possible that the old man was on the observe side and the young man on the reverse."

This he said to the Mizrachi official who was so sweetly reasonable, using the latter's style as a hint that left little to the imagination. Then he walked out, bent and broken, his eyes lowered and unseeing.

Ever since, Mr. Drabkin has been obsessed with officialdom, ready to consume them with his eyes, to destroy them in the spirit of one fulfilling a religious commandment, with pleasure and without mercy.

A great, stubborn and venomous hatred for the officials gnawed at his vitals, more violent than his hatred for the enemies of Israel and for the Bolsheviks, for the latter only harmed his body and robbed his possessions and wealth but left him his dreams and hopes, while the officials destroyed his soul and robbed the dream in his heart, the hope of his life and the last ray of light remaining to him, leaving him barren like the stem of a palm leaf or like a bunch of grapes from which the fruit has been picked. Yes, he was robbed and despoiled and had nothing left, nothing at all in the whole wide world. Everything had been taken from him.

He had thought it would be otherwise. How much he had toiled! And for whom had been all his labours, for whom had he wasted his strength? To improve the lot of these politicians and officials and other evil characters? Where was his compensation? Where his reward? What had become of his good name? He was like a stranger in this land for which he had given his whole soul, diligently toiling for its settlement and upbuilding. Now he felt like a stranger amidst an alien people.

The more deeply he delved into matters the more confirmed he became in his convictions, and his heart was filled with hatred and anger. Hatred became his daily bread and provided him with the essence of his life; indulging in it he felt cheerful and superior. If not for this hatred, he would have been like unto the dead.

Little by little, as he progressed from one complaint to another and from one censure to another, things became mixed up and he began to confuse officialdom with the country as a whole. Everything now seemed wrong to him. When people would not agree with his exaggerated denunciations of the officials, he would become wrathful and say that there was nothing worthy in the country. And though at first he really did not think so, once he had made his statements and people argued with him he clung to his declarations and elaborated them and would not reverse himself.

Thus he became, against his will and contrary to his interests, an anti-Zionist ready to devour and destroy Israel and its officialdom. Naturally people gnashed their teeth and declared war on him and he rose to his strength and accepted the challenge. They fussed with him and he fussed with them; they argued—accomplishments; he retorted — risks. They cheered gains; he pointed to despair. They —the triumph of the certain; he —doubt and the nihilism of the early "enlightened".

Thus he argued endlessly, denying and negating and rejecting everything. An enemy of Zion, a man of wrath and contention and quarrelsome out of spite. You say sacred; he says profane. You say clean; he says unclean. You speak of the wind; he cites the rain. You say city; he says village—and vice-versa.

GIVES G.I. 3,000,000th BOOKLET

The 3,000,000th copy of the Jewish Calendar for Members of the Armed Forces, containing valuable data for Jewish servicemen, came off the press. The National Jewish Welfare (JWB), a member agency of USO, has issued the calendar annually since 1917. At headquarters in New York, Philip M. Waterman, chairman of JWB's Armed Services Division, presented copy number 3,000,000 to Sgt. Leon Stein, of Detroit, stationed at the U. S. Air Force Base at Mitchell Field, L.I.

The calendar, a 96-page pocket-size booklet covering the Hebrew year 5712, is being distributed to Jewish servicemen in the U. S. and at 15 areas overseas. JWB is the government-authorised agency for serving the special religious and recreational needs of Jews in the U. S. armed forces. In addition to calendars, JWB issues hundreds of thousands of religious and educational items to Jewish servicemen.

An agreement was signed at Geneva between the Government of Israel and the Lutheran World Federation. The signature of this agreement follows negotiations which were carried on in Israel, Switzerland and the United States with a view to a friendly settlement of all questions concerning Lutheran church properties in Israel. The agreement disposes of all outstanding questions, providing for the restitution of some of the Church properties to the Federation for purposes of worship; and for fair compensation for such properties as are not used for purposes of worship and as will remain vested in the State.

Do You Serve Soup at "MILCHIG" Meals?

Try this Taste-Test!

131 housewives did and 85 voted HEINZ their top flavour favourite

When a group of average housewives in a typical small Canadian city were asked to make a "blindfold" test of two leading brands of Cream of Tomato Soup, the result was overwhelmingly in favour of Heinz.

Of course, the women were not actually blindfolded, but they were served two bowls of heated Cream of Tomato Soup that were identified only by the letters A and B, and asked to write down the brand they preferred. Nearly 65 per cent voted Heinz FIRST for flavour. Less than 35 percent voted for another well-known brand, with one lone lady registering no choice.

Here are a few of the comments made by another group of women when asked their opinion of Heinz Cream of Tomato Soup:

- "It's No. 1 soup in our home."
- "No other competes with it."
- "Have always preferred Heinz because the flavour is definitely superior."
- "Heinz tomato flavour is truer."

Try this taste test on your own family. Heat a tin of Heinz Cream of Tomato Soup and a tin of any other brand. Serve half-helpings of each and get your family's verdict, when they have tasted the wonderful difference. Chances are it will be two to one for Heinz.

If you have been buying some other brand for any reason, try Heinz Cream of Tomato Soup just ONCE. It will be the beginning of a long friendship. Taste will tell!

American plays are very well received in Israel because they reflect the kind of tempo that Israelis experience in their day-to-day living, according to Lee Strasberg, prominent American stage director, who recently returned from Israel where he had been sent by the American Fund for Israel Institutions to work with the Habimah Theatre. While there he laid the groundwork for the establishment of a studio theatre.

Fruit Bread — made with New Fast DRY Yeast!

● Don't let old-fashioned, quick-spoiling yeast cramp your baking style! Get in a month's supply of new Fleischmann's Fast Rising Dry Yeast — it keeps full-strength, fast-acting till the moment you bake! Needs no refrigeration! Bake these Knobby Fruit Loaves for a special treat!

KNOBBY FRUIT LOAVES

● Scald 1½ c. milk, ⅓ c. granulated sugar, 2 tsps. salt and ½ c. shortening; cool to lukewarm. Meanwhile, measure into a large bowl ⅓ c. lukewarm water, 1 tsp. granulated sugar; stir until sugar is dissolved. Sprinkle with 1 envelope Fleischmann's Fast Rising Dry Yeast. Let stand 10 minutes. THEN stir well.

Add lukewarm milk mixture and stir in 2 well-beaten eggs, ½ c. maraschino cherry syrup and 1 tsp. almond extract. Stir in 4 c. once-sifted bread flour; beat until smooth. Work in 2 c. seedless raisins, 1 c. currants, 1 c. chopped candied peels, 1 c. sliced maraschino cherries and 1 c. broken walnuts. Work in 3½ c. (about) once-sifted bread flour. Knead on lightly-floured board until smooth and elastic. Place in greased bowl and grease top of dough. Cover and set in a warm place, free from draught. Let rise until doubled in bulk. Punch down dough, turn out on lightly-floured board and divide into 4 equal portions; cut each portion into 20 equal-sized pieces; knead each piece into a smooth round ball. Arrange 10 small balls in each of 4 greased loaf pans (4½" x 8½") and grease tops. Arrange remaining balls on top of those in pans and grease tops. Cover and let rise until doubled in bulk. Bake in moderate oven, 350°, about 1 hour, covering with brown paper after first ½ hour. Spread cold loaves with icing. Yield—4 loaves.

Note: The 4 portions of dough may be shaped into loaves to fit pans, instead of being divided into the small pieces that produce knobby loaves.

Urge U.N. To Protect Small Groups

An appeal to the United Nations not to deny protection to the remnants of Jewish minorities in countries from which most Jews had departed has been made by the World Jewish Congress. The request was made at a meeting of the Commission on Human Rights when Dr. Gerhard Jacoby, WJC deputy representative at the U.N., pointed out that a proposed definition of minorities for purposes of protection by the world organization restricted such protection to minorities with considerable numbers of people.

Very small groups must also be given aid and legal protection, Dr. Jacoby told the Commission. He pointed to the fact that recent large scale immigration has reduced the Jewish population of Iraq from 120,000 two years ago to 15,000-to-20,000 today; the Jewish population of Syria from 35,000-to-40,000 20 years ago to 5,000-to-6,000 today; and the Jewish minority of Libya from 30,000 four years ago to 5,000-to-8,000 today.

"To consider that these groups lost their right to enjoy international protection as minorities because the majority had driven out the larger portion of this minority would be to put a premium on persecution," Dr. Jacoby said. "These remnants continue to possess the same ethnic or religious characteristics, and their desire to preserve these characteristics cannot be considered as diminished just because these minorities do not represent in numbers the same strength as before."

The WJC representative also challenged the portion of the definition which required "loyalty" to the state as a criterion for the right to protection. "It would flout every sense of justice," Dr. Jacoby said, if the United Nations should recognise that the members of a minority who are driven to despair by acts of persecution and therefore appeal, for instance, to the United Nations or request help from foreign organizations, have thereby lost the right to protection. Under a blanket clause of "loyalty" such acts could be considered by the government concerned as warranting forfeiture of the right to enjoy the status of a member of a recognized minority, Dr. Jacoby said.

Interviewed recently in Geneva on the needs of Israel's economy Joseph S. Shapiro, director-general of the Palestine Electric Corporation and president of Israel ORT (Organization for Rehabilitation through Training), outlined a detailed plan for the elimination of the shortage of technicians which is hindering the development of basic industries in the expanding economy. The highly developed textile industry was cited by Mr. Shapiro as an example of a field suffering from insufficiency of trained labor. Only an appropriate system of trade schools, elementary and advanced, can meet this demand. Other fields which need schools for advanced training are book printing and professions for women such as household economy, laboratory work and photography as well as the needle trades.

A series of three commemorative stamps in honor of the New Year 5712 have been issued by Israel. In denominations of 5, 15, and 40 pruta, and colors of blue, crimson and violet, respectively, the stamps have designs symbolizing the four major Jewish holidays observed during the month of Tishri, the first month of the Jewish civil calendar. The 5 pruta stamp features a pair of carrier pigeons bearing holiday greetings; the 15 pruta stamp shows a maiden carrying a young dove and fruits of the land, symbolic of Succoth; and the 40 pruta stamp depicts the Scrolls of the Law, the Torah, symbolic of Simchat Torah, the Festival on which the reading of the Law is begun anew in the synagogue.

HANDS OFF ISRAEL

BY DR. M. PIVNICK, OF TORONTO, ONT.

This, indeed, is a "hot" subject, and it must be delicately handled. Speaking last week to a very prominent Toronto Zionist, who had just returned from Israel, I was much chagrined at his attitude. He particularly disliked the sobriquet "You American Jews", that the Israelis often use in conversation. The customs officials were not polite enough to him. Goldie Myerson wasn't such a "big shot", etc., etc.

The upshot of the whole business, I told him, probably was that he, like many other American Jews, was disappointed because Ben Gurion did not head a delegation on his arrival at Lydda Airport. After all, we are their rich relations, and are entitled to all the amenities and prerequisites that go with pomp and circumstance. I told my friend that all gold of Wall Street cannot begin to compensate for the great tragedy of that mother of Israel, who the poet Leivik so eloquently described when she lost her two sons in the Israeli war. And there were thousands of such mothers, who suffered similar losses.

A remark that stung me to the quick was when he said we send them millions of dollars every year, with the emphasis on the "them". This reminded me of the "Rosho" in the Haggadah, who asks the question: "What are these laws and customs that you observe?" That is, "you", but not "he". People must not look on these gift dollars as charity any more. These dollars, together with the establishment of Israel, have raised the status of the Jew everywhere, and no more need he consider himself a second-class citizen.

Who did all the pioneering work? Who drained the swamps and the marshes and contracted malaria, trachoma, typhoid, and all the other diseases endemic to a forgotten land, covered for centuries with the sands of the desert? Those boys and girls stood waist-deep in water to build up a barren land, and are still doing it to-day. They made oranges grow where before was but stone and rock; they made a veritable garden out of a wilderness. On top of all that, they, single-handed, fought to a standstill the Arab League nations, and hoisted the Israeli flag in triumph and glory. Moreover, due to the American embargo, they could not obtain ammunition from the U.S.A. and so, by all sorts of clandestine methods and underground channels, they got their supplies and military equipment from Czechoslovakia, Italy, and Yugoslavia.

I say once again, leave Israel alone as far as government is concerned. But, my good friends, the hundred per cent free enterprisers cannot countenance a Knesseth that is even tinged with the virus of socialism. They would like free and uncontrolled speculation, full steam ahead by "the boom and bust" method, otherwise called the "American way of life". The U.S.A. is practically the only straight out-and-out free enterprise country left in the world today and with all her wealth America is in the midst of the greatest spiral of inflation she has ever seen. It is sapping her economy and proving to be a worse enemy to her own set-up than any outside agressor.

Invariably it's big business that likes to tell Israel what to do. They do not see that this young country cannot stand anything else but a planned economy. Free enterprise run riot is very wasteful and it will surely destroy the land and its people, and Israel will fall prey to the jackals that surround her.

Do the Irish in the U.S.A. tell the people of Eire what to do? And I venture to say that there are more Irish in America than in the whole of Ireland. Do the Italians outside of Italy interfere in the affairs of their government? Why are the Jews so different? We expect a little country that only had three short years of experience in self-governing to be as efficient and smooth-running as the Parliament of Great Britain, with a history of over a thousand years behind it. And affairs even there are not running so smoothly. They are beset with austerity, the queue system, rationing, and shortages of all sorts.

But Israel must have things running ship-shape from the very beginning. We surely must be "The Chosen People". No, my dear hundred per cent free enterprisers, your ideas of government are rapidly becoming archaic and are not suited for Israel. Each shoemaker to his last. Our job here is to collect the funds. It is their job to run their country as they see fit.

Commentaries

By Dr. Henry J. Stern, Rabbi

Bearing Our Burdens

Any man can be a hero when things go right. The test of genuine heroism is our behaviour when things go wrong, and every life is made up of successes and failures, achievements and disappointments. This problem of human sorrow and suffering was dealt with by Rabbis in a most unique manner. Rabbinic tradition has it that the world was not completed by one creative act; the universe did not spring into being perfect.

The world is a growing world. It is ever developing and man's mission is to help bring it into perfection; the evil and tragedy in the world will diminish and even some day disappear. Man, say the Rabbis, is a partner with God. Man is the world. Man, therefore, is not to hold God responsible for all the suffering. For the most part man himself is responsible for the evil in this world. Man, violating the laws of God, brings self-made evil. Man's inhumanity to man brings misery to all concerned.

Yet a great truth concerning sorrow must ever be kept in mind. Sorrow is often a great discipline. Beauty of character is made possible by pain. The sweetest berries in all the world are found in Alaska and not in sunny Florida. The artistic hammering upon bronze yields the beautiful figures found on European Cathedral doors. There is still another truth concerning sorrow. Our joyful experiences are greater, but because these come so frequently and so regularly, alas, we have come to take them for granted. Thus it is that we hardly ever pause to question: "Why am I happy?" "Why am I blessed?"

The discovery we can make if we study life closely is that no worthwhile life is free from overcoming handicap. The best people are those who themselves have tasted the bitter cup. The best people are those who had to take life's second best and build upon it. This they succeeded in doing by taking a positive attitude in facing difficulty. It is poor technique, indeed, to complain about life's difficulties! The story is told of Ole Bull, the great musician, who in the midst of a concert performance discovered that the "A" string of his violin snapped. Bull nevertheless carried on, transposed the composition and finished on three strings amidst thunderous applause.

What we must learn to do is to accept ourselves and our limitations and make the very best, all that we possibly can, out of life. Undaunted, unafraid, and with faith we can surmount many, if not all, of the obstacles on life's pilgrimage. The most important element, yes, is faith and without it successful creative living is impossible. Verily the biblical sage was right when he laid down the principle, "The righteous man liveth by his faith."

The Prospects For Freedom

The following is the text of a radio address by Moshe Sharett, Israel Foreign Minister, delivered for the World Affairs Institute of the University of Denver:

He would be a bold man who dared to venture an estimate of the prospects for freedom in the next half century. The experience of the first half of the century has taught us how slender are the roots of freedom in the soil of western civilization; how easily the heritage which we took over without effort from the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries can be uprooted by economic crisis, unscrupulous demagogy, and ruthless force; how the very processes of democratic government can be abused for paralyzing democratic thought and action. We have witnessed how, step by step, the outworks of democracy have been dismantled, how readily people are disposed to sell their civic birthright for economic benefits, real and imaginary, how easy it is to spread the notion that these things "can't happen here" and by thus creating a false sense of security to paralyze resistance to incipient dangers.

We have not yet discovered any prophylactic for immunizing modern society and its institutional life against these dangers or any effective means of breaking up totalitarian dictatorship once it has been established. This, however, we have learnt afresh: In the last resort, the guarantee of civic freedom is to be found not in institutions or constitutional devices, but in the readiness of ordinary men to stake all on the attainment and defense of liberty. It is not in the public arena that the decisive battle for liberty has to be fought but in the secret recesses of the hearts of men and women who are the ultimate arbiters of the future of civilization. Democracy and human freedom can be maintained only if the plain people of the world have the political maturity to defy the blandishment of the demagogue, and the moral courage to resist the challenge of the would-be dictator from the moment he lifts his spurious banner.

There is no panacea for the defense of liberty, but there are ways and means by which democracy can endeavour to protect itself against its own undoing. There is, first of all, the spread of knowledge and historical truth. History is the great armoury from which mighty weapons can be drawn in the timeless battle for the rights of man. To train people to use their judgment and critical faculty is a first pre-requisite of democratic government. There is no more effective shield against the misguiding tactics of totalitarian dictatorship.

Yet vital as are education and knowledge, these spiritual attainments alone will not save us if we do not learn to put our material house in order. This is the second pre-requisite. Democracy has little chance of surviving on a global scale unless we succeed in eliminating the glaring economic inequalities that disgrace our civilization. As long as hunger and want stalk vast areas of the globe, desperate men and women will ever fall ready victims to the demagogic appeal of political schemers who promise them a new heaven on earth if only they abjure their own judgment and blindly follow these self-appointed "leaders."

And there is yet a third cause we have to promote if we wish to ensure liberty—a paramount and overriding objective and one most difficult to attain. That is the elimination of war which, as all historical experience shows, is the arch-enemy of human-freedom. We must all of us, great and small, set our face resolutely against the resort to force in the settlement of international disputes. The United Nations Organization has provided a framework for the maintenance of the world's peace, but is no more than a framework. It can be filled with real content only if the peoples of the world so will it.

In this vital sphere every nation is to-day called upon to make its contribution. Israel has in the short period of its existence endeavoured to promote the cause of democratic freedom and international peace, both in the global sphere and in the range of Middle Eastern relations. Our effort of reconstruction and rehabilitation, the Redemption of the Land and the Ingathering of the Exiles, as we call it, is not merely an attempt to solve one of the great and most pressing human problems of the modern world, but also, in the long run, a contribution to the elimination of international tensions. It may further, as we hope, prove the forerunner in the great battle against poverty, ignorance and disease which faces the Middle East as a whole.

We have time and again declared our readiness to meet our neighbours at the conference table with a view to settling outstanding difficulties and laying the foundations for the peace and development of the Middle East. We feel confident that in the end sheer necessity and enlightened self-interest will lead to understanding and a lasting peace. While waiting for peace to come to the Middle East, which Israel alone can do little to bring about, we have also striven hard to help in the councils of the United Nations towards the liquidation of other international conflicts which have beclouded the world scene and towards strengthening the authority of the United Nations in resisting aggression and enforcing the provisions of the Charter.

An old Talmudical saying has it that the world is built on three foundations: truth, justice, and peace. This profound maxim may well be said to apply also to the preservation of human freedom in our day.

changing the course of the river, widening it to handle ships up to 3,000 tons deadweight and almost unlimited numbers of barges. The installations will then be leased or sold to private operators when ready for use by the end of 1952."

Haifa also hopes to have a new breakwater by the end of 1953 at which as many as nine ships will be able to work cargo at once, Mr. Recanati said. Although Tel Aviv has not proved equal to its prospects as a port, Israeli authorities are surveying the shore south of the city to build a new harbor.

Labor and dock facilities were both inadequate when the new state came into being, Mr. Recanati said. But dockers can now discharge 6,000 tons a day in the Port of Haifa whereas they could only handle 2,000 tons a day then. This year, Israel expects to handle two million tons of imports and exports, more than double the total in 1948.

The first ship especially built for Israel is due to arrive there soon, Mr. Recanati told the New York Times. It is the 4,000-deadweight ton Rimon, one of two fruit and cargo carriers built in Holland that will enter the service of the Zim Israel Navigation Company to North Europe. The line now operates seven freighters in European trade. Zim will also begin service to West Africa with another newly acquired vessel, the 3,000-dead-weight ton Kishon, assigned to the run to Pointe Noire, Libreville and Takoradi, where she will pick up lumber for Israel.

More and more young Israelis are being attracted to the sea for a livelihood, Mr. Recanati said, as the industry expands. Nautical schools, such as those in Haifa, are turning out personnel who will eventually be able to man the entire fleet.

manager of the Hebrew Actors' Union and began many reforms in the Jewish wing of the profession. Among his reforms was the merger of the Variety Actors Local 1 and the so-called legitimate actors union, making it easier for new talent to enter the Jewish theatre, says the New York Herald Tribune.

Mr. Guskin served five terms as president of the Workmen's Circle. He was also vice-president of the Jewish Labor Committee, a member of the Jewish Socialist Alliance, a director of the Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society and of the Joint Distribution Committee. He was also one of the founders of the Histadruth Labor Organization for Israel and delegate to many conventions of A. F. of L.

In 1940 he was nominated for Representative to the Fourteenth Congressional District to fill the unexpired term of the late Dr. William I. Sirovich. When reports of dissension within the American Labor party over his nomination reached him he withdrew his candidacy.

Three years ago Mr. Guskin was advised by his physicians to retire. At that time he was quoted as saying: "Even if it shortens my span of life, I shall continue rendering service to mankind, because retirement will shorten my life anyway."

His wife, Mrs. Gussie Guskin; two daughters, Mrs. Frieda Ginsberg and Mrs. Anna Cooper, and a son, Nathan Guskin, survive. A funeral service was held in the auditorium of the Jewish Daily Forward building, 175 East Broadway.
